

Annual Report

2020

*In Washington State last year, we successfully defeated an ill-conceived effort by the State legislature to impose a state-mandated paddler education program and to address pandemic related closures at river access sites.

Members and Fellow Paddlers,

Last year was a year like no other that started with a great deal of uncertainty. The American Whitewater team had to rally and adjust to a new pandemic reality, even something as basic as running a shuttle required a rethink as to what was acceptable risk in a pandemic era. Yet, we managed to grow our base of support even in the face of having to move our in-person events to a virtual format. As we move forward, there is a sense of optimism for what the future holds, a future that includes robust protections for wild rivers. It's become clear over the last year that Americans love their public lands and rivers. If there has been a silver lining to the pandemic it is the value Americans place on their ability to get outside and find solace in nature and on rivers. That urge to be outdoors and in nature has helped many of us find balance in challenging situations. Plus, it's made clear that protecting public lands and rivers, and their access, are the bipartisan issues of our time.

With Zoom events becoming the new normal, the American Whitewater team dug in and took on a major overhaul of membership management systems with the goal of being able to communicate with our community more efficiently. These efforts are paying off as we increased both our dues paying membership and engagement rates. Our engagement rate to policy makers (those are your email comments to lawmakers) increased three-fold last year. This demonstrates our community's ability to lean forward and provide meaningful input on policy issues that impact rivers we all love.

It's been a trying year, with a global pandemic impacting our families and social justice issues challenging our communities. As an organization, our members and leaders support each other and are willing to learn and grow, even during the most difficult times. We're on a river stewardship journey and recognize that the future of stewardship requires a constituency that is representative of future demographics for stewardship to remain relevant.

There's a lot of talk these days of returning to "normal," we all look forward to its arrival. We're on the right path but not out of the woods yet, and the team at American Whitewater is committed to something better than "normal" that is more forward thinking. As hard as last year was, it provided the opportunity to reimagine the ways we achieve our goals and we made significant strides in our river stewardship program as outlined in the following pages of this report. The sudden unexpected appearance of the pandemic shows us how little we know about what's to come. That sudden appearance also taught us how important it is to adapt quickly and pivot as unforeseen situations arise. We've managed to make those adjustments, thanks to strong support from membership, and we are a better version of ourselves for doing so.

See you in the next eddy,

Mark Singleton

Last year the Great American Outdoors Act was signed into law, providing $9.5 billion to address the maintenance backlog on federally managed public lands and fulfilling a long sought goal for American Whitewater of permanent full funding for the Land and Water Conservation Fund (LWCF). Our community stood alongside us and pushed hard for the passage of this legislation and we're now focused on using the fund to invest in the enhancement of river access and recreational facilities. We were also leaders in the effort to secure passage of legislation with over a thousand miles of Wild and Scenic designations and millions of acres of protections for some of the most storied whitewater landscapes in the West, including the Grand Canyon (AZ), the Dolores (CO), the Olympic Peninsula (WA), and several whitewater rich watersheds in California (Trinity Alps, Central Coast, San Gabriels). The Protecting America's Wilderness Act (PAWA) was attached to the National Defense Authorization Act in December and passed in the House, but ultimately was not successful, when the Senate decided to pull the public lands provisions out of the final bill. This legislation however is now well positioned for action in 2021 and we continue to advocate on numerous fronts for it to become law.

Mid-Atlantic

New permits for dams offer both risks and opportunities, and in 2020 American Whitewater helped local paddlers make improvements in the new permit for Upper Youghiogheny releases. In addition American Whitewater worked with local paddlers to improve paddler access in several state and county parks, provided access at several access sites that the organization owns or helps manage, and continued our role in scheduling releases on the Savage River, North Branch Potomac, and on the New River Dries where we recently negotiated flow restoration.

Northern Rockies

Our crowning achievement in the region in 2020 was the introduction of the Montana Headwaters Legacy Act, which would designate 17 new Wild and Scenic Rivers north of Yellowstone National Park. This bill was carefully crafted based on a decade of outreach by American Whitewater and our partners and has a bright future. Also in Montana, our work contributed to interim protections for a total of 52 streams deemed potential Wild and Scenic Rivers in new management plans for the Helena Lewis and Clark and Custer Gallatin national forests. Our work was more defensive in Idaho, where we pushed back on a proposal to mine the headwaters of the South Fork of the Salmon River, and on a precedent setting attempt by the Forest Service to avoid protecting 89 streams in the Lochsa River region in a forthcoming new management plan. The good news is that paddlers spoke up in record numbers on behalf of these rivers in response to our action alerts.

Northeast

The COVID pandemic presented challenges for northeast paddlers resulting in cancelled whitewater releases and access closures. American Whitewater worked to quickly restore access including reopening Bulls Bridge on the Housatonic in Connecticut where the closure eliminated important boating opportunities and had a disparate impact on diverse river users. Our work on hydropower dam relicensing continued, including a successful whitewater boating study on a new river reach on West Canada Creek in New York. On other rivers in the region, we worked to finalize the Settlement Agreement on the Mongaup River in New York and continued our advocacy efforts on a dozen other hydropower dams in the northeast.

American Whitewater led an effort to define recreation flow needs on the Klamath River in California, as we continued to support the push for the removal of five dams along the river in 2020. | Photo by Thomas O'Keefe

California

In California, American Whitewater spent a hectic year navigating class V issues including closures due to the pandemic and unprecedented wildfires. We were successful in opening access to several rivers where closures were not justified and we continue to advocate for a better approach that avoids closures of our rivers on National Forests. We worked collaboratively with counties, state and federal agencies, and utilities to responsibly address scheduled recreational releases during the pandemic. Taking our lead from the local community and county health guidelines, American Whitewater advocated for flows and access on the South Fork American River, Fordyce Creek, Mokelumne River, Pit River and the North Fork Feather River. We submitted over 1,000 email comments protesting proposed changes to water diversions that would impact over 50 miles of whitewater on the South Fork American River. As a result, El Dorado Irrigation District put a hold on the diversion proposal and committed to hydrologic modeling to measure impacts to the watershed. We joined Outdoor Alliance California as steering committee members of the Sustainable Outdoor Recreation Collaborative (SORC), a roundtable working with the U.S. Forest Service Region 5 to promote collaborative action and shared stewardship of sustainable outdoor recreation.

Pacific Northwest

As in many areas of the country, we struggled with how best to respond to pandemic related closures at recreation sites. We worked with regional leaders to re-open recreational opportunities and were among the leaders to establish the Recreate Responsibly Coalition. The coalition spread nationally and we expect it will continue on in future service as a forum for more effective partnerships and improved communication among user groups and managers. With robust engagement from our volunteers, we successfully defeated an ill-conceived effort by the Washington State legislature to impose a state-mandated paddler education program. On the Nooksack River we were pleased to see the Nooksack Dam finally removed after three decades of engagement. Now that the dam has been removed, we will be working to permanently protect the river from future dams or water development projects. We continued efforts to support removal of the Klamath Dams while ensuring that a future vision for a restored river includes accommodations for recreation. We led an effort to better understand instream flow needs for recreation there and found spectacular opportunities in Ward's Canyon, a segment currently dewatered by the hydroelectric project.

Southern Rockies

After 12 years of hard work, the Upper Colorado River Wild and Scenic Alternative Management Plan (AMP) was finalized and formally accepted by the Bureau of Land Management and Forest Service to protect and enhance its flow related values. Values like recreational boating of the Upper Colorado River between Kremmling and No Name in Colorado. Ensuring collaborative and cooperative management was the goal for AMP. Because of the trust built amongst the diverse stakeholders, the plan provides avenues and tools for the protection and enhancement of the Upper Colorado, outside the scope of a federal Wild and Scenic designation. Along with our conservation partners, American Whitewater also initiated a process to designate high quality streams as Outstanding Waters to protect them from any degradation. The streams are in the Gunnison, San Juan and Dolores River basins and include paddling destinations like Escalante Creek.

In New Mexico, Senators Udall and Heinrich announced the introduction of the M.H. Dutch Salmon Greater Gila Wild and Scenic River Act. The Act, officially introduced on May 8, 2020, would protect over 440 miles of free-flowing rivers and streams in the Gila and San Francisco watersheds.

Southeast

Building on the designation of Soak Creek, the first new Tennessee State Scenic River in 17 years, in 2020 American Whitewater supported and celebrated additional State Scenic River designations for Piney River, Little Piney River, and Duskin Creek. On North Carolina's Nantahala Pisgah National Forest we worked with a diverse collaborative group to advocate for a new final management plan that includes expanded river protections and improved recreation management. The draft plan, which we reviewed in 2020, proposes to increase the number of protected potential Wild and Scenic Rivers from 10 to 19. An outgrowth of this collaborative work was shepherding an ever-growing movement to secure Congressional Wild and Scenic designation for the Nolichucky River. In North Carolina's high country American Whitewater also celebrated a new put in for the Watauga Gorge that we contributed to, and a new USGS stream gage on Wilson Creek that we secured funding for and commissioned.
